Dr. Mark Eginton and his wife have been lifelong residents of Minnesota. After completing high school in Detroit Lakes, he attended UND, graduating with a Bachelor of Science in Chemistry (Cum Laude) in 1991. He went on to medical school at the University of Minnesota, at both Duluth and Minneapolis, receiving his MD degree in 1995. He received additional training in general and vascular surgery at the Medical College of Wisconsin, Milwaukee.

During general surgery training, Dr. Eginton spent six months as a visiting specialist registrar in general surgery at the Royal Devon and Exeter Hospital in England, which was a highly sought-after and rewarding experience. He had diverse experience during his vascular surgery fellowship, including clinical trials, basic science research, open surgery and endovascular intervention. Four research publications have Dr. Eginton listed as author, two as the main author. He has also co-authored a vascular surgery textbook chapter. Board certified in General Surgery and Vascular Surgery, he currently serves as the Chair of the Department of Surgery, St. Luke's Hospital-Duluth, MN.

As an alumnus of UM-D, he has also worked with the UMN medical school as a clinical instructor. Dr. Eginton also works with the Whiteside Institute, a partnership between the University of Minnesota Medical School-Duluth and St. Luke's, to participate in clinical trials pertaining to vascular disease.
